

IBM Global Remote Mentoring Program FAQ's:

What is IBM Global Remote Mentoring Program?

GRM is a unique platform where students remotely work on challenging short/long term technical projects defined by IBM mentors. The program encourages students to work innovatively and develop new approaches to solving a technical problem.

What is unique about GRM?

Students get the opportunity to interact with top IBM technical expertise and learn to use tools and strategies to get skilled and comfortable with gen next technologies and doing it online makes it all the more easier to work from any part of India.

Who can participate?

Students from any engineering discipline pursuing under graduation/post-graduation can participate. Although the projects are on first come first serve basis.

How many members can participate?

Students can do one or multiple projects simultaneously with a team of minimum 1 student to maximum 4 students. A faculty mentor is advisable for each team who applies for a GRM project.

How to sign up for GRM?

- Visit the exclusive GRM project portal - <http://connecttobuild.in>
- Select the project of your choice & apply.
- Register yourself to create a student account login.
- Make sure that you input the correct information in the form.
- Any one team member can apply for the project and add the other team members after signing up for the project.
- After successful registration, a confirmation mail will be sent to your registered email id.
- The email contains a link where each member confirms his/her participation.
- Now your team and the IBM mentor can connect with each other using the project portal to discuss and proceed further with the project.

Where to get further details about the project?

All the details such as project scope of work, duration, submissions, evaluation, etc. will be communicated by your respective IBM mentor.

What happens after the team completes the project?

Once the IBM mentor confirms in the tool that a project is completed with particular team, the respective team members will get individual certificate from IBM.
